Excerpt: . . . nd the subsequent discovery of information about al-Qaedas efforts to obtain weapons of mass destruction, combined with the National Intelligence Estimate, make it imperative that we focus more resources on what should be our highest national security priority, and that is preventing the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons. And finally, is the Presidents budget for international affairs adequate to protect our national security The President requests 25. 4 billion, which is less than the amount provided in 2002, if you include the emergency additions we added to the budget. The question is if you take that away, there is about a 6 percent increase. Is that enough True, as compared to the regular appropriations contemplated before September 11, this budget, as I said, contains a 5. 9 percent increase in nominal terms. But these are not regular times, as the President has correctly emphasized. The budget this year should be measured against the total spending for last year. By that standard, the budget for fiscal 2003 appears to assume that we can return to the status quo ante. Aside from the promised expansion of the Peace Corps, a development that I welcome, and a continuation of the Secretarys proposal to address the personnel shortfall in the Department, which I think is critical, there appear to be few significant initiatives or increases in the foreign affairs budget that reflect the changed world in which we live. The Presidents budget provides for a significant increase in the Department of Defense and homeland security, but it appears to fall short in providing enough resources for our first line of defense, our diplomatic...
