Not illustrated. 1836 Excerpt: .happy man, an industrious man; though it is frequently placed after it; as, The man is happy, he is industrious, he is useful. The adjective is sometimes connected with the noun so as to form one compound term; as sea-weed, /uWoiu-ground, AiVArway, fec. The words foie and hind, front and rear, lieadnnd end, right and left, in and out, high and low, top and bottom, up and down, upper and under, mid and after, are often joined in composition with other words; and some of them, when used as adjectives of place, are rarely separated from their nouns; as, in-land, mid-sea, after-ages, c. There are, strictly speaking, but two degrees of comparison, namely, the comparative and superlative--the positive being only a foundation for the other two, is not, in reality, a degree of comparison, as by comparison is meant a change or variation of one object when compared with some other; but from the fact that there are three varieties, the natural state of the object is called the positive degree, in order to distinguish it from the other two. Noah Webster enumerates four degrees of comparison, the first of which, called the imperfect, is formed by adding the termination ish; us, whitto, whitwA; red, reddisA, c, and denotes a slight degree of comparison below the positive. The simple word, or positive, becomes the superlative by adding st or est, or by prefixing most or least; as, wisest, most wise, least wise. The adverbs more...
