No, marm. but outside. Mr. Goldschnapp was hurrying through his tea, when the bell rung again, and the servant brought up a slip of paper. It is the same young gentleman, sir, and he says give you this bit of paper. It is my young friend. Mr. Powell. Go down and ask him to come up, girl. Ruth, eh! How are you looking? Well, I see! He is a nice young person, this Mr. Powell! He would make a good match when he comes of age, if he did n t run through with his fortune before the honey-moor.! Why, he is a Christian, father! In courtesy, Ruth, said Jacob, smiling. Besides, if your mother! tells me truly, you are more Christian than Jewess. The young dark-browed girl blushed, and was at a loss how to...
